DETAILED ACTION

Response to Election

The examiner is in receipt of applicant's response to office action dated 9/28/2004. Acknowledgment is made to the election of Group II, claims 6-9 and the withdrawal of claims 1-5 and 10-12 with out traverse.

Examiner's Note

Examiner has cited particular columns and line numbers or figures in the references as applied to the claims below for the convenience of the applicant. Although the specified citations are representative of the teachings in the art and are applied to the specific limitations within the individual claim, other passages and figures may apply as well. It is respectfully requested from the applicant, in preparing the responses, to fully consider the references in entirety as potentially teaching all or part of the claimed invention, as well as the context of the passage as taught by the prior art or disclosed by the examiner.

In regards to claim 6, Tobita discloses a commodity purchasing method through a network, comprising the steps of: receiving a connection request sent from a computer and a connection request sent from a cellular phone which includes an identifier corresponding to an identification code of said cellular phone (Fig 1, col 1, lines 15-20);

determining whether said identifier is included or not (Fig 10);

storing said identifier and user status information associated with said identifier in a database contained in a unit for receiving said connection request (Fig 12); and Tobita teaches sending different information based on the capabilities of the particular receiving device and determining the delivery method based on an identifier and directing the information in an Http format to an internet service provider (see summary), but does not specifically mention that a different session control is used if no identifier is received. It was old and well known in the art to receive purchase requests though the Internet without the use of an identifier. It would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to include using the system of Tobita to include different session control for those computers without an identifier, because Tobita is capable of being connected to the internet and performing functions such as are accomplished by conventional computer connections and assures that information is provided according to the separate storage and display capabilities of the receiving device (col 1, lines 14-20 and summary). Tobita would be motivated to include providing information to conventional computers, since this would increase the sales of the Information Provider by identifying the increased capabilities of those that do not come from server 2 (Fig 1) as being from a conventional computer and providing the information in a manner commensurate with the capabilities of the conventional computer thus maximizing the efficiency of the displayed information (col 4, lines 33-67).

In regards to claim 7, Tobita teaches wherein said step of executing different session control comprises using history information communicated between said system and said computer if it is determined that said identifier is not included, or using said identifier and said user status information if it is determined that said identifier is included (see response to claim 1).

In regards to claim 8, Tobita teaches wherein said network comprises a first network for communicating with said computer and a second network for communicating with said cellular phone and said method further comprises a step of sending the connection request from said cellular phone through said second network (Fig 1).

In regards to claim 9, Tobita teaches the step of adding said identifier corresponding to said identification code to said connection request sent from said cellular phone (col 13, lines 1-67).
